Researching a combined Census: Consultation and engagement on the Statistics Canada Census Transformation Project

Moderator: James Falconer, Demography Division, Statistics Canada

Presenter: Sylvain Delisle, Census Program Transformation Division, Statistics Canada

The purpose of this session is to offer an opportunity for partners and professional users of census data to learn about and give feedback on new and future methods in the Census Transformation Project. Statistics Canada has a double mandate with the Census Transformation Project. First, it must oversee the creation of a statistical population register and its integration into an overall system of statistical registers. Second, it must research a new approach to population and dwelling counts using a census that combines traditional enumeration with the increased use of the administrative data contained in these statistical registers. This session will feature a presentation on the current progress and direction of the Census Transformation Project, followed by a consultation and exchange with the audience about the theoretical and practical implications of the Project for population research in Canada.
